4. Rationale for conference attendance:

I am requesting $1800 for travel and lodging expenses to present at the Seventh Edinburgh Symposium on Historical Phonology taking place in Edinburgh, Scotland between 1–2 December, 2025. At the conference, I am slated to present a paper titled “Synchronic phonetic variation drives diachronic sound change: further evidence from pre-nasal raising in Young Avestan.” A preliminary version of this paper will be presented at the graduate seminar of the Program in Indo-European Studies on November 24, 2025. The presentation of this paper is directly related to my scholarly interests in the systematic study of diachronic phonology and how evidence from experimental phonetics in the tradition exemplified by Ohala and Blevins and phonological typology can help us in attaining a better understanding of the synchronic phonological systems of the Indo-European languages and their diachronic development. Since the Edinburgh conference is the premier gathering of historical phonologists working on related problems of the mechanisms, both cognitive and social, leading to sound change and the emergence of phonological systems, attending the conference will contribute substantially to my professional and academic development. The conference also takes place every couple of years and provides a great opportunity to network with historical phonologists who are either based in Europe or the UK or are based in the US but are working on problems of historical phonology on non-Indo-European languages.
